Intro to Improv

Improv is a style of acting where the performers do not have scripts or pre-planned dialogue. This introductory course is for anyone that would like to learn more about the basic rules and tools of Improv, while having fun learning!

Students will explore the history and practice of Improvisational theater, starting with the ancient Greeks and moving through the centuries to modern day. Learn why this has become such a popular acting technique!

In this course, students will examine the influence of different audiences, environments and situations and how they change what the performer does on stage. Videos and guest performers will help expand the students' knowledge on this subject.

Students will also learn how public speaking and the ability to "think on your feet" can help in their personal and professional lives. Students will engage in games and activities to explore how Improvisation can be a vital tool in different settings.

This is sure to be a fun class. Join us this fall!

Meet the Instructor

Debi Gross: Debi got her Masters in Theater Arts at Stony Brook University and loves sharing theater with others.

She is a Lab Coordinator in the Social Competence & Treatment Lab at SBU Psychology. Among her many duties there, she has been an interventionist in the Lab's Social Groups for Youth with ASD study.

She looks forward to bringing this class to the PBS Campus Experience on the campus of Stony Brook University.

PBS Adult Education classes are taught using various instructional methods tailored to the specific needs of adult learners. Students will be encouraged to develop critical thinking, research and study skills, and utilize technology for learning and collaboration. All students inherently benefit from being engaged in an active college environment.
